FALL 2010

West Bald Hill: 20th Anniversary

It was the Spring of 1990. A dozen people gathered in a living room in Philomath to talk about a property adjacent to Bald Hill Park, 54 acres on the west slope of the hill were on the market to be sold as 2-acre allotments. The Park’s main hiking trail looped through these acres, and the vistas across the valley were unparalleled from its summit, with visibility to the peaks of the Cascade and Coast Ranges. The trail passed through carpets of wildflowers in early summer, including the largest known population of the threatened native Willamette Daisy.

These community members were coming together because they recognized the importance of this property, and knew that they had to do something to protect it. They decided to act. Twenty years later our entire community is indebted to the foresight and swift action taken by this active group in the yearling youth of the Greenbelt Land Trust.

Within 6 months Greenbelt managed to raise nearly $200,000 to acquire the west side of Bald Hill, successfully purchasing the property in December 1990. More than 300 people responded with contributions … amounts ranging from $5 from an elementary school student as a gift to his teacher, to three donors who met the challenge to “adopt” two acres for $7,500. In 1993 Greenbelt deeded 41 acres of this site to the City of Corvallis, while retaining a conservation easement on the property in perpetuity. Greenbelt now coordinates with organizations like the Institute for Applied Ecology and the City of Corvallis to facilitate native plant restoration and trail maintenance with volunteers on the site.

In 1990 a third of all local residents were visiting Bald Hill Park at least annually - over the past twenty years its popularity among hikers, bicyclists and equestrians has grown exponentially. Though its namesake ‘baldness’ has long ago succumbed to the hardiness of encroaching conifers, there is still something unique and special about this park that continues to draw us in.

“This is one of my favorite parks”, says GLT volunteer Anthony Stumbo, who hikes Bald Hill daily … plus, he says “If you come out and do this, you don’t get old.”

Until recently, Bald Hill’s treeless top and grassy slopes served as testimony to the annual planned burning of the Willamette Valley by the Kalapuya Native Americans to facilitate hunting and harvesting of seeds and acorns. Oral history refers to an Indian camping ground in the shadow of Bald Hill, and trappers with the Hudson Bay Company followed a trail that passed near the base of the west side of the knoll. In 1845 the second white settler to ‘Marysville’ was Johnson Mulkey, claiming the north and west side of Bald Hill in the Donation Land Claim Act of 1850, and later building one of the first schoolhouses in the region on this land.

Over the past 150 years the landscape has changed, roads and houses built, but the importance of Bald Hill and its place among this community has only been strengthened.

“There is something amazing about being able to walk out your front door, and be in a natural area within minutes. Greenbelt Land Trust is proud to have played a part in the protection of Bald Hill.” – GLT Executive Director, Michael Pope

The next time you are hiking amid legacy oaks as you ascend to the summit of the hill, looking out over Marys Peak and the swales of its westward slopes, remember that a dozen people in a living room in Philomath made the protection of these acres possible. At the 20th anniversary of this project, we celebrate the living legacy that they have gifted to us all.

“Heroes are not statues framed against a red sky; they are people who say ‘this is my community and it’s my responsibility to make it better.’” – Tom McCall
Land Restoration

Initial restoration efforts at the Evergreen property began in 2010. This 220-acre property, south of Philomath, was purchased in 2009 with funds from the Oregon Watershed Enhancement Board and the US Fish and Wildlife Service for the purposes of restoring native plant communities and wildlife habitat. Hardworking volunteers removed invasive Armenian (Himalayan) blackberry from a riparian area and removed debris from an old paint ball course, while heavy equipment began restoring altered hydrology.

Prior to Greenbelt owning the property drain tiles were installed to remove water from moist soils to make the land more suitable for farming. Drain tiles are perforated pipes buried in the soil that capture water from the soil, draining it to a nearby waterway. While this improved the farming, it has now become necessary to return the hydrology in order to restore wetlands to the site. With help from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife a backhoe dug up and removed portions of the buried drain tiles so that water will now stay on-site, allowing development of wetland vegetation.
